Communities that Care (CTC) Pueblo Department of Public Health and Environment:

Pueblo Communities That Care (CTC) strives through collaborative efforts to decrease youth substance use by strengthening protective factors and increasing access to positive, pro-social opportunities for youth in the Pueblo community. Through CTC's Community Spaces Strategy, the team focuses on expanding access to safe, welcoming community spaces, which is shown to reduce risk factors associated with substance use. Transportation remains a key barrier for many youths in accessing these spaces, making transit-focused strategies especially important.

This year, CTC's transportation-related efforts included:

- Supporting and promoting free public transit for youth in Kindergarten through 12th grade. (If you see "YOUth Ride Free," that is a CTC initiative.)
- Receiving the Arts in Society Redline Grant to beautify four public bus stops, transforming them into vibrant, youth-informed community spaces and encouraging increased public transit use.
- Collaborating with community partners to develop a pilot safe-ride program for youth ages 16–22, planned to operate from spring break through graduation season to reduce impaired driving risks.
- Received a grant to conduct a Teen Safe Driving Campaign. CTC youth board created and designed banners and fliers that were posted throughout Pueblo County. The safety campaign focused on: distracted driving, driving under the influence, speeding, wearing seat belts and fewer passengers.
